Celent: Maple Tech Clients Say “Nobody Else Was Able to Provide the Flexibility and Functionality at Such a Low Cost”

Manalapan, NJ – May 23, 2007: Celent recently released their 2007 Policy Administration Systems report and Maple Tech and their Aspire Information came out with some really good grades.

Once every two years, industry-leading consultant Celent conducts an evaluation of Policy Administration Systems available from the industry’s technology vendors, and publishes a report with their findings.

In the 2007 PAS report, Celent notes that Maple Tech’s Aspire Information System “is a complete end-to-end system” solution and “the user interface is one of the richest available...” providing “a significantly enhanced client experience.” Celent also notes that when it comes to rates and rules table management Aspire’s “...rules engine is remarkably intuitive...” and “...changing rates also seems to be quite easy.” From a usability standpoint Celent comments that “overall, the [Aspire] system sports one of the most modern interfaces available.”

When considering implementation and implementation costs, Celent says “implementing the Aspire system requires fewer resources than with many other systems.” Celent highlights the fact that Maple is able to “keep implementation costs well below average” and “implementations of Aspire [are] some of the quickest around, especially for complex commercial lines.”

In summary, Celent says that “Maple has...developed an excellent system with very happy clients.”

“To say that we were completely delighted with Celent’s review of our company and our Aspire product would be an understatement,” says Nicholas Teetelli, Maple Tech’s CEO. “Celent’s findings serve as an accreditation to us that the dedication and focus we have committed in the development of Aspire are truly geared toward offering our clientele unparalleled flexibility, user-friendly interfaces and a truly powerful state-of-the-art information system platform.”
